ENTERPRISE AI STRATEGY FOR GOVERNMENT

Government agencies at all levels (including state attorney general offices) are looking to leverage the power and opportunities artificial intelligence presents to enhance their mission and operations. From task automation, management and information operations, to improving overall customer/constituent services, the possibilities and breakthroughs seem endless. However, the combination of rapid pace of development and a significant knowledge gap among end-users presents serious challenges to any organization. How should government approach these technologies as procurers and users? What frameworks, governance and ethical standards should be in place? And how should government entities assess and manage the risks to properly unleash the potential? Join experts as they discuss these and other issues.

THE ROLE OF STATES IN INTERNET POLICY

Federalism plays a valuable role in providing for laboratories for democracy, particularly when the federal government is unable or unwilling to legislate. In the case of Internet policy, there is an increasing trend of state regulation of a range of topics, ranging from public safety (addressing online sales of retail theft and fentanyl sales) to protecting victims (addressing revenge porn) to consumer data privacy to protecting children from mental health harms from social media. Moreover, where there is federal action and leadership, including on the broadband infrastructure program and guidance on artificial intelligence, the federal government is looking to and respecting the important role of states. In this panel, we will discuss the state of Internet policy and the central role states are now playing.
